Whether a spousal visa, carer's visa, family stream visa, skilled visas, student visas, Websters Lawyers can help you identify if a certain visa may be applicable to you and your situation. We can also help you apply for that visa and represent you in any Migration Review Tribunal hearings and Administrative Appeal Tribunal hearings.

Other family Visas

You may have family overseas whom you wish to have stay or live with you in Australia. This may be a parent, child, aged dependant relative, remaining relative or a family member who has now become an orphan relative. These relatives may satisfy the requirements for a family visa.

You may have an elderly relative who is financially dependent on you and has no other means to pay for their own living costs. They may qualify for an Aged Dependent Relative visa.

Australia is a growing country with evolving needs. At times there are skill shortages in areas and not enough people in Australia with the relevant qualifications to meet the demand. You may be a student completing studies in an area where there is a skill shortage. We can help you apply for a visa to remain in Australia on a visa that will allow you to use your skills to engage in employment.

Not all visas allow the visa applicant to live in Australia indefinitely. Each visa serves a particular purpose and can be subject to various conditions. One condition may be that the visa holder cannot work during their time in Australia or that a certain amount of money is required to secure their stay in Australia.

In order to apply for particular kinds of visas, applicants may need to meet health, character, and qualification requirements in addition to the basic requirements for the particular visa. Websters Lawyers can provide you with advice on the requirements and what you can do to ensure the highest chance of success in your visa application.
